

Clair Mowbray - Chief Executive, National College of High Speed Rail

Clair joined HS2 Ltd to lead on the development of the National College for High Speed Rail in 2014. She has been instrumental in taking the project from concept through to its current stage of development, working across stakeholders to achieve buy-in and support for the project. She was appointed as Chief Executive of the National College for High Speed Rail in September 2016.

Prior to this Clair was involved in strategic planning and development of 14-19 education, supported organisations through merger and advised government on policy. More recently she worked to develop a new approach to education and skills development for the South West Strategic Health Authority that focused on immersive virtual learning and professional development.

Clair's career is characterised by working with organisations dedicated to supporting people through skills development. Her wide experience is an excellent platform for successfully implementing the National College, given its clear mandate to closely link skills development with the economy. Clair is passionate about promoting the opportunities that the high speed rail sector affords to a wide range of learners through an innovative teaching model.
